

Information about

This online publication was designed by Gerd Bräuer in 2003 and originally launched at Emory University (www.emory.edu) in Atlanta (USA). Today, this multilingual journal is an independent international project with currently partners in the US (Colgate University) and Germany (Universität Bamberg, Technische Universität Chemnitz, Pädagogische Hochschule Freiburg). Ideally, the development of new issues will rotate among the partners. Please write to info@schreiblesezentrum.de if you want to become an official partner of this publication.

Please make use of this multilingual online publication in your teaching and learning about people, their languages, and cultures.

Teachers, use the articles of this online newspaper with their wide range of topics, vocabulary, pictures, and related websites as starting points for cross-cultural reading tasks, discussions, or foreign language writing assignments in first or second languages.

Students, don't be shy to use whatever language you learn when you write us. Even a short note to the author of your favorite article (you will find the "Post Your Feedback" section at the end of each article) is a great start and I am convinced that any author would appreciate your comment. If you want to submit an article for a future edition, please send an email to info@schreiblesezentrum.de at any time. The international team of peer tutors and editors of ISJ will be glad to assist you in your writing process. We also look for new volunteers as either section editors, peer reviewers, or (near) native language proofreaders. Your help, even for preparing just a single article, will be highly appreciated.

Be well, read our journal, and share your intercultural experience with our readers around the globe.
